Architecture in the age of global modernity: Tafuri, Jameson and enclave theory. in: Beaumont, M., Hemingway, A., Leslie, E. and Roberts, J. (ed.) Jack the ripper! It is generally accepted that between 31st Aug and 9th Nov 1888... The 'Diary of Jack the Ripper' that was 'discovered' in the 1980s suggests that the killer was James Maybrick, a Liverpool cotton merchant who visited the East End of London on a regular basis. This story is even more interesting as James was murdered by his wife Florence in a highly publicised trial and it is suggested that his regular arsenic abuse (small doses were often taken at the time to produce a high) was sending him mad and Florence had perhaps discovered what he was doing in London and killed him. London was a busy port and he may have gone to live elsewhere (some theorists say he went to America and then killed again) or perhaps he died? The Ripper writing:
